ORDER

17 Before the Court is Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 85) and 18 Statement of Undisputed Material Facts (Doc. 86), Defendants' Response (Doc. 101) and 19 Statement of Facts (Doc. 100), and the Reply (Doc. 102). For the following reasons, 20 Plaintiffs' Motion will be granted.

21 I. Procedural Background

22 Plaintiffs brought this action to enjoin enforcement of Arizona Legislature HB 23 2800, 2nd Regular Session, 50th Legislature (2002) ("the Arizona Act" or "the Act"), 24 which prohibits any health care provider who performs elective abortions from receiving 25 Medicaid funding. A.R.S. § 35-196.05. Plaintiffs contend that the Act violates the 26 Medicaid Act (Count I), and that the Act is unconstitutional (Counts II-V). The Arizona 27 Act was scheduled to take effect on August 2, 2012, but the parties stipulated to a 28 temporary restraining order that delayed implementation and enforcement of the Act

1 pending the Court's ruling on Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction. On October 2 19, 2012, the Court entered its Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law (Doc. 78), 3 concluding that Plaintiffs were likely to succeed on their Medicaid Act claim, and issued 4 a Preliminary Injunction (Doc. 79) that enjoined Defendants from enforcing the Arizona
5 Act with respect to Plaintiffs. After the Court issued its injunction, the parties stipulated 6 that while the Preliminary Injunction was in force, Defendants would be enjoined from 7 taking any action to implement or enforce the Act (Doc. 88). The parties then stipulated 8 to stay all discovery in this case pending the Court's ruling on Plaintiff's Motion for 9 Summary Judgment and agreed that the Motion does not rely on any facts that would 10 require any discovery (Doc. 97).

11 II. Statutory Structure

12 In this Motion, Plaintiffs contend that they are entitled to summary judgment on 13 their claim that the Arizona Act violates the Medicaid Act as a matter of law. The 14 statutory scheme underlying that claim is described in detail in the Court's previous 15 Order (Doc. 78), so only a brief synopsis will be provided here. The Medicaid program, 16 established by Title XIX of the Social Security Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1396 et seq., is a 17 cooperative federal-state program created to provide medical assistance to needy families 18 and individuals. State participation in Medicaid is voluntary, but once a State elects to 19 participate, it must meet the program's federal requirements. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1396a(a)(1)- 20 (83); Frew ex rel. Frew v. Hawkins, 540 U.S. 431, 433 (2004).

21 At issue here is the Medicaid Act's requirement that a state Medicaid plan "must [] 22 provide that . . . any individual eligible for medical assistance . . . may obtain such 23 assistance from any institution, agency, community pharmacy, or person, qualified to 24 perform the service or services required. . . ." 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(23)(A). Section 25 1396a(a)(23) (the "freedom of choice provision") therefore confers upon Medicaid 26 recipients "the right to choose among a range of qualified providers, without government 27 interference." O'Bannon v. Town Court Nursing Ctr., 447 U.S. 773, 785 (1980). A state 28 participating in Medicaid retains the power to establish "reasonable standards relating to

1 the qualifications of providers. . . .” 42 C.F.R. § 431.51(c)(2). A state can also exclude 2 health care providers from participation in Medicaid “for any reason for which the 3 Secretary could exclude the [provider] from participation,” “[i]n addition to any other 4 authority.” 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(p)(1).

5 The Arizona Act prohibits any person or entity that performs abortions—except 6 when the pregnancy is the result of rape or incest, or threatens the life or health of the 7 mother—from participating in Arizona’s Medicaid program. A.R.S. § 35-196.05.
8 Plaintiffs argue that they are entitled to judgment as a matter of law that the Arizona Act 9 violates Medicaid beneficiaries’ right under § 1396a(a)(23) to receive care from any 10 qualified provider they choose.

11 III. Legal Standard

12 Summary judgment is proper if the evidence shows there is no genuine issue as to 13 any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R.
14 Civ. P. 56(a). The movant has the burden of showing the absence of genuine issues of 15 material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323 (1986). An issue of fact is 16 material only if it “might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law.” 17 Chevron USA, Inc. v. Cayetano, 224 F.3d 1030, 1039 (9th Cir. 2000) (quoting Moreland 18 v. Las Vegas Metro. Police Dep’t, 159 F.3d 365, 369 (9th Cir. 1998)). At the summary 19 judgment stage, courts view all evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving 20 party. Rohr v. Salt River Project Agric. Imp. & Power Dist., 555 F.3d 850, 864 (9th Cir.
21 2009).

22 IV. Analysis

23 Both the relevant legal principles and the factual circumstances of this case remain 24 unchanged since the Court issued its Preliminary Injunction Order. As a result, the 25 analysis of Plaintiffs’ claim that the Arizona Act violates the Medicaid Act is 26 substantially the same as that set forth in more detail in the Preliminary Injunction Order 27 (Doc. 78). The analysis in the Preliminary Injunction Order was reinforced when, after 28 the Order was issued, the Seventh Circuit affirmed an injunction against a substantively

1 identical state statute from Indiana. Planned Parenthood of Ind., Inc. v. Comm’r of Ind.
2 State Dep’t of Health, 699 F.3d 962 (7th Cir. 2012). In that case, the Court of Appeals 3 also concluded that the state statute violated the Medicaid Act, for reasons that largely 4 mirror this Court’s reasoning in the Preliminary Injunction Order. Rather than repeat all 5 of the analysis in the Preliminary Injunction Order, this Order incorporates it by reference 6 and will summarize and expand its findings of fact and conclusions of law below.

7 A. Plaintiffs Have a Right to Sue Under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

8 In order to have a private right of action to enforce federal statutory rights under 9 42 U.S.C. § 1983, a plaintiff must establish that Congress intended the statute to create an 10 enforceable individual right. Gonzaga Univ. v. Doe, 536 U.S. 273, 283–84 (2002). In 11 their Response in Opposition to Summary Judgment, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs 12 have failed to meet that burden and so are not entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

13 When Congress legislates pursuant to its spending power, it may only create 14 mandatory federal requirements that are binding on the states when it speaks with a “clear 15 voice” and manifests an “unambiguous” intent to confer individual rights. Pennhurst 16 State Sch. & Hosp. v. Halderman, 451 U.S. 1, 17; Gonzaga, 536 U.S. at 280. Because 17 Congress enacted the Medicaid Act pursuant to the spending power, a plaintiff seeking to 18 enforce a provision of the Medicaid Act under § 1983 has the burden to show that the 19 provision unambiguously confers an individual right. Gonzaga, 536 U.S. at 280; see also 20 Ball v. Rodgers, 492 F.3d 1094, 1104-05 (9th Cir. 2007).

21 In order to establish that a Medicaid Act provision creates such an enforceable 22 right, then, a plaintiff must show that: (1) Congress intended the provision in question to 23 benefit the plaintiff; (2) the right allegedly protected by the statute is not so vague and 24 amorphous that its enforcement would strain judicial competence; and (3) the statute 25 unambiguously imposes a binding obligation on the state, such that the provision is 26 couched in mandatory, rather than precatory terms. Blessing v. Freestone, 520 U.S. 329, 27 340 (1997). The Supreme Court further clarified the first prong of this three-prong 28 Blessing test by instructing courts to examine whether Congress used “rights-creating”

1 language to establish individual rights that were “unambiguously conferred.” Gonzaga, 2 536 U.S. at 283-84.

3 In the Preliminary Injunction Order, the Court found that the Medicaid freedom of 4 choice provision satisfies each prong of the Blessing test and creates an individual right 5 enforceable under § 1983. There have been neither factual developments nor changes in 6 the law that could support a different conclusion at the summary judgment stage. First, 7 Congress evinced its intent that § 1396a(a)(23) benefit individuals by using paradigmatic 8 “rights-creating terms.” The freedom of choice provision includes language focused 9 squarely on individuals eligible for Medicaid and provides clear instructions for what the 10 states must do to ensure that eligible individuals receive services to which they are 11 entitled. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1396a(a)(23)(A)-(B). Second, largely because of those clear 12 instructions, the right of a Medicaid-eligible individual to select from among a range of 13 qualified providers without government interference is not so vague and amorphous that 14 it would be difficult for courts to enforce. Third, the language of the freedom of choice 15 provision is unambiguously framed in mandatory terms: all states “must provide” that 16 their state plans protect the right of Medicaid beneficiaries to have their choice of 17 provider. “In sum, the [freedom of choice provision] explicitly refers to a specific class 18 of people—Medicaid-eligible patients—and confers on them an individual entitlement—19 the right to receive reimbursable medical services from any qualified provider.” Planned 20 Parenthood of Ind., 699 F.3d at 974.

21 Resisting this conclusion, Defendants again contend that § 1396a(a)(23) does not 22 confer a private right of action under § 1983. Defendants advance two arguments, both 23 raised in their briefing on the Preliminary Injunction but expanded in this Response.
24 First, they argue that the freedom of choice provision is too vague for the court to 25 enforce, and so fails to meet the second prong of the Blessing test. Second, they argue 26 that the Court’s interpretation of the freedom of choice provision—finding that it imposes 27 a mandatory obligation on the states to ensure the right to receive medical services from 28 any qualified provider—would violate the clear statement rule of Pennhurst.

1 Defendants' first argument remains unpersuasive for the same reason that it failed 2 at the Preliminary Injunction stage: the right created by § 1396a(a)(23) "is administrable 3 and falls comfortably within the judiciary's core interpretive competence." Planned 4 Parenthood of Ind., 699 F.3d at 974. A court could "readily determine whether a state is 5 fulfilling these statutory obligations by looking to sources such as a state's Medicaid 6 plan, agency records and documents, and the testimony of Medicaid recipients and 7 providers." Ball, 492 F.3d at 1115.

8 The core of Defendants' argument is that the use of the term "qualified" in the 9 freedom of choice provision creates such ambiguity in the provision that it would be 10 difficult for courts to enforce the requirement. But there is nothing vague about the 11 ordinary meaning of the word qualified in the provision: a "qualified" provider is one 12 "[p]ossessing the necessary qualifications; capable or competent, [e.g.] a qualified 13 medical examiner." Black's Law Dictionary (9th ed. 2009). The statute itself reflects 14 this ordinary meaning. The plain language of § 1396a(a)(23) connects the limitation on 15 an individual's free choice of "qualified" providers to the ability of the provider "to 16 perform the service or services required." 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(23)(A). States retain the 17 authority to set qualification standards, 42 C.F.R. § 431.51(c)(2), but they can only adopt 18 reasonable standards related to the ability of the provider to perform the Medicaid 19 services in question. Indeed, far from introducing ambiguity that would render the 20 provision unenforceable, the term "qualified" in § 1396a(a)(23) "unambiguously refers to 21 the provider's fitness to render the medical services required." Planned Parenthood of 22 Ind., 699 F.3d at 980.

23 Defendants' second argument fares no better. Because the freedom of choice 24 provision meets all three prongs of the Blessing test, it also complies with the Pennhurst
25 clear statement rule. The Supreme Court reconsidered whether federal legislation 26 enacted pursuant to the spending power can confer enforceable rights under § 1983 in 27 Gonzaga, and it did so expressly in light of the restrictive Pennhurst clear statement rule.
28 Gonzaga, 536 U.S. at 279-81, 283. The Blessing test, as modified by Gonzaga, therefore 1 incorporates and develops the clear statement requirement of Pennhurst. Id. at 280-83.

2 As a result, a provision of the Medicaid Act that satisfies the Blessing test, as clarified by 3 Gonzaga, necessarily meets the requirement of the Pennhurst clear statement rule. See 4 Ball, 492 F.3d at 1104-05; see also Planned Parenthood of Ind., 699 F.3d at 972-73.

5 The Court has already concluded that the freedom of choice provision meets each 6 prong of the Blessing test, and reaffirms that conclusion in this Order. Congress clearly 7 expressed its intent that the freedom of choice provision create a specific, individual 8 federal right by phrasing the provision “with an unmistakable focus on the benefited 9 class;” here, individual patients eligible for Medicaid. Gonzaga, 536 U.S. at 284 (quoting 10 Cannon v. Univ. of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 691 (1979)). Further, Congress expressly 11 imposed an obligation on the states to guarantee this federal right. The states “must [] 12 provide” individual freedom of choice among qualified providers, 42 U.S.C.
13 1396a(a)(23)(A), and “shall not restrict the choice” among qualified providers of family 14 planning services, 42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(23)(B). The right § 1396a(a)(23) creates is 15 explicit and the states’ obligation to provide for that right is unambiguous. The 16 Pennhurst clear statement rule, as developed in Blessing and Gonzaga, is therefore 17 satisfied. Individuals who are eligible for Medicaid thus have a right to receive medical 18 assistance from the qualified provider of their choice under § 1396a(a)(23), and can 19 enforce that right through a § 1983 cause of action.

20 B. The Arizona Act Violates the Freedom of Choice Provision as a Matter
21 of Law.

22 The remaining dispositive question in this Motion is purely a question of law:
23 whether Arizona can limit the range of qualified Medicaid providers for reasons unrelated 24 to a provider’s ability to deliver Medicaid services without violating a beneficiary’s right 25 to have free choice of qualified providers. As the Court found in the Preliminary 26 Injunction Order, the language of the Medicaid Act, canons of statutory construction, and 27 the relevant legislative history all compel the conclusion that Arizona lacks that authority.
28 A state may not restrict a beneficiary’s right to select any qualified provider for reasons

1 wholly unrelated to the provider's ability to deliver Medicaid services. There have been 2 no changes of law or fact since the Preliminary Injunction Order that would alter that 3 conclusion. Plaintiffs are therefore entitled to judgment as a matter of law that the 4 Arizona Act violates § 1396a(a)(23).

5 As before, Defendants present a strained interpretation of the word "qualified" that 6 would include any reasonable criteria a state sees fit to impose, regardless of whether the 7 criteria relates to the ability to provide Medicaid services. That interpretation contradicts 8 the plain meaning of the phrase "[providers that are] qualified to perform the service or 9 services required," which describes qualified providers as those providers that are 10 competent to provide the needed services. 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(23).

11 Defendants' interpretation also is foreclosed in light of the narrow and specific 12 exceptions Congress provided to the freedom of choice requirement. See, e.g., 42 U.S.C.
13 § 1396n(b)(4). Congress would not have included a broad guarantee of free choice 14 among qualified providers, subject to enumerated and well-defined exceptions, and then 15 vested in the states the authority to circumvent that guarantee for nearly any reason.
16 Section 1396a(p)(1), which allows states to exclude providers for a number of 17 enumerated reasons "[i]n addition to any other authority," is merely one such exception 18 to the freedom of choice guarantee. Defendants argue that § 1396a(p)(1) grants states the 19 authority to define, for any reason supplied by state law, what makes a provider 20 "qualified." Such an interpretation would render the remainder of the exceptions to the 21 freedom of choice provisions, in which Congress carefully set forth the circumstances in 22 which a provider can be excluded from the program, redundant. See, e.g., 42 U.S.C.
23 § 1396n(b)(4) (granting the Secretary authority to allow states to restrict choice of 24 providers for Medicaid beneficiaries only when the restriction "does not discriminate 25 among classes of providers on grounds unrelated to their demonstrated effectiveness and 26 efficiency in providing those services"). Congress would not have drafted the Medicaid 27 Act to make the specific instances in which the Secretary and a state could restrict choice 28

1 of providers redundant. Section 1396n(b)(4) does not, therefore, give the states plenary 2 authority to disqualify an entire class of providers for any reason supplied by state law.

3 Defendants cite Guzman v. Shewry, 552 F.3d 941 (9th Cir. 2009), to support their 4 contention that a state retains the authority to set any reasonable standards for 5 participation in Medicaid. Guzman does not support Defendants' argument. In Guzman, 6 the Ninth Circuit found that "states have the authority to suspend or to exclude providers 7 from state health care programs for reasons other than those upon which the Secretary of 8 HHS has authority to act." Id. at 949. As a result, Guzman held that a state has the 9 authority to exclude a provider based on a pending criminal investigation as part of its 10 authority to exclude providers from participating in Medicaid "for reasons bearing on the 11 individual's or entity's professional competence, professional performance, or financial 12 integrity." Id. (quoting 42 U.S.C. § 1320a-7(b)(5)). That holding is entirely consistent 13 with the Court's interpretation of § 1396a(a)(23). States retain the authority to set 14 standards for participation in the Medicaid program, but only reasonable standards related 15 to the ability of the provider to perform Medicaid services. A state may not restrict a 16 beneficiary's right under § 1396a(a)(23) to select any qualified provider for reasons that 17 have nothing to do with Medicaid services. Nothing in Guzman suggests otherwise. See 18 Planned Parenthood of Ind., 699 F.3d at 980.

19 As in the Preliminary Injunction Order, this conclusion is based on the language of 20 the Medicaid Act and related regulations, basic canons of statutory construction, and the 21 legislative history of the involved provisions. In the Preliminary Injunction Order, the 22 Court further found that consistent agency interpretations were persuasive independent of 23 the level of deference owed and therefore resolved any remaining doubt about the 24 meaning of § 1396a(a)(23) in light of § 1396a(p)(1). Because the interpretation of those 25 provisions in this Order and in the Preliminary Injunction Order is independent of the 26 agency's interpretation, it is unnecessary to resolve the question of the level of deference 27 to accord the agency in order to resolve this case. The Court's conclusion that Plaintiffs 28 are entitled to judgment as a matter of law does not depend at all on deference to agency

1 interpretations. Those interpretations, which are persuasive because they were 2 thoroughly considered, carefully reasoned, and consistent, simply confirm the Court's 3 independent conclusion.

4 C. There Are No Genuine Issues of Material Fact.

5 There are no material issues of fact in dispute in this case, only questions of law.
6 Defendants contend that two issues of fact bear on this Motion: 1) Plaintiff Planned 7 Parenthood Arizona, Inc. ("Planned Parenthood") provides only a small portion of the 8 total Medicaid family planning services in Arizona; and 2) Planned Parenthood would be 9 able to create a separate entity to provide elective abortion services and thereby avoid 10 disqualification from the Medicaid program under the Arizona Act. Even assuming these 11 facts to be true, these issues are not material because they could not affect the outcome of 12 this case under governing law. Chevron USA, Inc. v. Cayetano, 224 F.3d 1030, 1039 (9th 13 Cir. 2000). The freedom of choice provision "guarantees to every Medicaid beneficiary 14 the right to choose any qualified provider," unless an exception to the provision applies.
15 Planned Parenthood of Ind., 699 F.3d at 979. It is the Medicaid beneficiaries who enjoy 16 this right. The Arizona Act would disqualify otherwise qualified providers from 17 participation in the state's Medicaid program for impermissible reasons and thereby limit 18 the choice of qualified providers for Medicaid beneficiaries. As a matter of law, the 19 Arizona Act would therefore violate § 1396a(a)(23). That some providers may be able 20 hypothetically to restructure themselves to avoid disqualification under the Arizona Act 21 does not change the fact that the Act impermissibly impinges on the rights of Medicaid 22 beneficiaries. The number of those beneficiaries a provider serves, or the quantity of 23 Medicaid services for which a provider is responsible, is similarly irrelevant. These 24 issues of fact may mitigate the extent to which a Medicaid beneficiary's right is violated, 25 but the violation nevertheless remains. The Arizona Act violates the freedom of choice 26 provision of the Medicaid Act precisely because every Medicaid beneficiary has the right 27 to select any qualified health care provider.
28
